

Schedule Delays to/from Australia – Update #8

10th September, 2020

Dear Customer,

Further to our last weekly update on Monday Sept 7th, we wish to provide the following additional information regarding the current terminal situation in Australia:

SYDNEY

DPW

- based on the outcome of a Protected Action Ballot Order (PABO) last week, the Maritime Union of Australia (MUA) can now undertake work bans and stoppages within 5 working days of notice provided to DPW.
- at this time, however, the MUA have not tendered notice to DPW.
- as such, no change where Protected Industrial Action (PIA) remains lifted for Fremantle, Brisbane and Melbourne, but where work restrictions still apply for Sydney, and berthing protocols continue until the PIA has been lifted.
- average delays in Sydney DPW now stand at 24 to 72 hours
- congestion due to the number of off-window vessels, impacting the berthing line-up.
- expected recovery now estimated by week 40, but remaining under close review.

PATRICK

- delays in Sydney now averaging between 12-14 days for the current week
- the situation may unfortunately deteriorate further depending on the impact of PIA.

The already announced port omissions should help to improve the vessel line-up, however this area also remains under close review.
